Does your school have expertise in Behaviour Management, Coaching Skills or Questioning Skills? Would you like to author specialist Qcoach Learning bite-size online learning modules for the benefit of the entire teaching community?

Watford, UK – 6th January 2007. Qualtrak Solutions Ltd, a privately owned company that has developed the unique behavioural online learning solution called Qcoach Learning has today invited highly experienced teachers to share their expertise in three very important professional development areas for the school teaching profession.

The successful application of ‘Assessment for Learning’ principles is dependant upon the widespread use of Coaching Skills and Questioning Techniques.

Creating a coaching culture within the school whereby teachers support their peers in their personal development through regular formal and informal coaching will deliver major benefits in the quality of education. Coaching is a transferable and highly valued skill for every teacher to acquire and use everyday. Coaching skills can of course be applied not just in peer coaching but also as an integral part to teaching.

Effective Behavioural Management requires teachers to be able to use specific techniques in order to minimise the detrimental effect to all the other pupils. There are many highly experienced teachers and specialist trainers who have acquired a high level of competence in managing disruptive behaviour within a classroom. This expertise can be shared to the benefit of the entire teaching community through the benefits of Qcoach Learning.

Qcoach Learning is a unique online behavioural learning system designed to bring together ‘learners and experts’ to their mutual benefit. We are inviting schools or specialist trainers who are able to offer expertise in either coaching (in any of the many applications,) questioning techniques or behavioural management to use Qcoach to author learning modules which will be made available for purchase on a pay-per-use basis by teachers throughout the UK and beyond. The modules will carry the school’s name and will typically consist of about 60 minutes of bite-sized learning chunks undertaken anytime-anywhere (subject to the availability of the Internet and broadband.) No specialist IT/instructional design skills are required. The learning modules will replicate the one-to-one coaching style learning experience consisting of a series of questions linked to a situational video recording plus ‘expert insights’ that the learner will read once they have answered the question.

Qualtrak will pay to the school each month a % of the income received for their learning modules.
